OF THE TORTURING AND MURDER OF JEWS HAUSNER TELLS COURT IN JERUSALEM: "WE HAVE FACTORS WHICH TESTIFY TO THE ACTS AS CRIMES: THE VERY ESSENCE OF MURDER, THE VERY ESSENCE OF HERDING PEOPLE LIKE CATTLE, THE VERY ESSENCE OF TRACKING PEOPLE LIKE HUNTED BEASTS"

Beds of flowers at an ordinary looking Polish railway station were deceptions intended to calm the doomed Jews arriving at Treblinka, survivors from that death camp testified at the trial of Adolf Eichmann.

The station had a clock and a blackboard for departing trains. But the only trains that left this sham depot were empty, says Homer Bigart, in the New York Times. Treblinka was the terminus on earth for about 750,000 Jews, including most of the Jews from the Warsaw ghetto.

Beyond the station, in the camp itself, there were other Nazi attempts at camouflage, witnesses recalled at the trial of the former Gestapo (security police) aide. Eichmann, once the head of the special Gestapo section assigned to the annihilation of Jews, has been tried, and awaits sentence in November, for his role in the deaths of millions of concentration-camp victims.

A street called Paradise led to a large shed labelled the Bath House. There was also the reassuring sign: "Jews, after a bath and a change of clothes, will continue to the East for Labor."

Many Jews were fooled. Eliahu Rosenberg told the tribunal that when he was separated from his mother and three sisters on Himmel Weg (Paradise Way), he told them to send him their new address through an acquaintance in Warsaw. He never saw them again.

Mr. Rosenberg, spared by the Nazis to work with a corpse-disposal squad, learned soon enough that Treblinka was a death mill. He testified that at the end of Himmel Weg, columns of naked Jews were herded into the bath house, which was actually a gas chamber.

The illusions of many crumbled and those at the end of the line sometimes had to be prodded into the chamber with blows from rifle butts, he said. Mr. Rosenberg, a mild-mannered, bespectacled storekeeper, said he had witnessed the whole process of extermination at Treblinka. He recounted the horrors in a calm, steady voice.

He recalled that in the beginning, in the summer of 1942, Jews walked calmly down Himmel Weg to their death. "They did not know where they were being led," he said, reports the New York Times. But the secret of this vast slaughterhouse, where 10,000 Jews were once murdered in one day, could not be kept forever. By early 1943, most Polish Jews knew what deportation to Treblinka meant.

Mr. Rosenberg said that Himmel Weg then had to be lined by S.S. (Elite guard) men and Ukrainians. Whips and dogs were used to drive Jews toward the gas chambers.

Women were marched down Himmel Weg separately and went first into a large building where their hair was shorn and their clothing and valuables "checked." The shorn hair was placed in sacks and sent to Germany to fill mattresses.

After the women had been exterminated the men were then ordered to undress and were driven into gas chambers. Smaller chambers held 400 persons, the witness said, and Jews within them were packed so tightly that they had to stand with their hands above their heads.

The hatch was then closed, Mr. Rosenberg said, and poison gas was pumped into the chamber. "We heard cries — 'Hear, Oh Israel!' — prayers and cries of, 'Mother!' or 'Father!'" the witness said. "After thirty-five minutes they were usually dead. Two Germans standing by, listening to the sounds inside, would finally say: 'Alles schlaeft.' ('All asleep.')"

Then Mr. Rosenberg said, the corpse-disposal squad would go to work. Sometimes it would happen that children would survive the gas chambers, Mr. Rosenberg said.

"These were little children, lying close to the floor," he explained. "They would still be breathing. But the Germans would take them out and shoot them."

Mr. Rosenberg said that after the first day of ghoulish labor with the corpse-disposal squad some of his comrades tried to commit suicide, says the New York Times. "Many hanged themselves with belts," he said. "They wound the belts around their throats and one man would ask his friend to pull the chair away from under him."

Another Treblinka survivor, Avraham Lindwasser, a 42-year-old electrician, said he was sickened by his job, which was to pull gold teeth from corpses. He reached the end, he said, when he came upon the corpse of his sister. That night he tried to hang himself, but he was cut down by a bearded Jew who scolded him and told him he must live to tell the story of Treblinka.

Mr. Lindwasser said he was known in the camp as "the Dentist," although his equipment for the macabre task was a pair of pliers.

The weight of the salvaged gold teeth averaged eight to ten kilograms (about seventeen to twenty-two pounds) a week, he said. The teeth were sent to Berlin in suitcases. After the shock of encountering his sister's body, Herr Lindwasser said, he asked the inmate in charge for a transfer. He was removed from extraction work and given the job of polishing the salvaged teeth.

The story of Jews from Grodno who mutinied on the Himmel Weg as they were being herded to the gas chambers was told by Kalman Teigman, a mechanic. He said the men refused to disrobe, knowing that they were being led to their deaths.

Germans and Ukrainians started beating them. One of the Jews threw a grenade and wounded a Ukrainian guard. Germans and their Ukrainian allies in watchtowers opened fire and the Jews were chased fully clothed into the extermination sheds.

The hospital at Treblinka was a hut marked with a red cross. It had a "waiting room" and an exit to another place where an S.S. man murdered the patients with a shot in the back of the neck.

Mr. Teigman also described a rebellion at Treblinka on September 2, 1943. Jews broke into the camp armory and seized weapons, but the revolt was badly timed, says the New York Times. One of the leaders had shot an S.S. man thirty minutes before the rising was to have started and the Nazis were alert to danger.

One prisoner, whose job was to disinfect the quarters occupied by the Ukrainians, scattered gasoline in the hut and set it afire. Mr. Teigman said the flames had prevented him from reaching his assigned post. He said he escaped through a gap that had been made in the fence by other prisoners.

Mr. Teigman had been brought to Treblinka with his mother in 1942, when he was 20 years old. He was spared as an essential worker, but was separated from his mother and never saw her again.

Six months after his arrival, he said, the deceptively normal-looking depot was constructed. When this deception waned and the transports of Jews arriving at the siding became reluctant to move, S. S. men and Ukrainians lashed out at the arrivals with whips. Dawdlers were shot in the flower beds, the witness said.

The Nazis tried soothing ruses at other death camps, witnesses said. At Chelmo, the naked victims received soap and towels for showers as they boarded closed trucks that were mobile gas chambers.

At Belsec a smiling S. S. officer "with a voice like a preacher" told Jews as they entered the gas chambers: "No harm will befall you. All you have to do is breathe deeply. It will strengthen your lungs."

There were no survivors from Belsec, according to Attorney General Gideon Hausner. Information on the camp was introduced in an affidavit by an S. S. officer, Lieut. Kurt Gerstein, says the New York Times. The affidavit was sworn shortly before Gerstein hanged himself in a Paris prison after the war. Mr. Hausner said Gerstein had been responsible for the supply of disinfectant and poison gas to concentration camps.

The court overruled an objection by Eichmann's defense counsel, Dr. Robert Servatius, of West Germany, against admission of the affidavit. The document related Gerstein's visit to Belzec.

Gerstein, in his affidavit, said he had passed on information about the death camps to the Swedish legation in Berlin in the hope that the publicity would terminate the genocide program. The court ordered Mr. Hausner to find out whether Sweden had taken any steps to publicize the matter.

The affidavit described the arrival by train of 6,000 Jews from Lvov and told how they were gassed by diesel fumes. Some of the Jews were gassed in a building decorated with a copper Star of David. The building bore the inscription, "The Heckenholt Foundation."

Gerstein did not need to be told that Heckenholt was not a philanthropist, but an S. S. sergeant. Excerpts from the Gerstein document described the extermination march as follows:

"A Jewess of about 40 with eyes like fire cursed the murderers. She disappeared into the gas chambers after being struck several times by Captain Wirth's (an S.S. officer) whip. Many prayed. The doors closed. Sergeant Heckenholt tried to start the motor. It would not start. My stopwatch clocked it all—fifty minutes, seventy minutes and the Diesel still would not start. The Diesel started up after two hours and forty-nine minutes, twenty-five minutes passed. You could see through the window that many were already dead, for an electric light illuminated the interior.

"All were dead after thirty-two minutes. Jewish workers opened the doors. The men were still standing like columns of stone with no room to fall or lean.

"Even in death you could tell the families, all holding hands."

Attorney General Gideon Hausner tried to force Eichmann to admit that as head of the central office for Jewish emigration in Vienna before World War II he had the function of despoiling and expelling Austrian Jews, says the New York Times. The Attorney General sought to prove that Eichmann had threatened Jewish leaders with another pogrom similar to that of the terribly destructive "Crystal Night" of November 9, 1938, or with concentration camps.

But the defendant insisted that he had saved Jews from annihilation by spurring their exodus at a time when emigration was still possible. Mocking laughter from the public gallery greeted his statement that although the emigrés lost all their property, "it was not my fault."

Oblivious to the unfriendly sounds from the crowded gallery, Eichmann cried out indignantly that his relations with Jewish leaders were always "correct," that he had never tried to pauperize Jews and that if Jews had lost their property, "that is regrettable but I had nothing to do with it."

He asserted that expropriation of the property of wealthy Jews was employed to finance the emigrations of impoverished Jews — that he had, in fact, contributed to the fulfillment of the Zionist dream by thus promoting emigration to Palestine.

Defending his role in the forced emigration, Eichmann answered, declared: "I would be reproached in this court today had I put the brake on emigration. I actually regret I did not accelerate it more."

Mr. Hausner asked: "You said that your work in Austria gave you satisfaction and the joy of creation — true?"

"Yes, true," the defendant replied.

Then Mr. Hausner asked: "You will agree with me that what you did in Austria was compulsory expulsion of the Jews?"

"It was directed and planned emigration," Eichmann answered, "and I am sorry it could not go on during the war days."

Eichmann denied that as head of the Central Office for Jewish Emigration he drove Jews out of public life in Austria, says the New York Times. "I did not make the laws," he asserted. "I had no

Brights FINE CANADIAN Wines
SINCE 1874

At your sabbath table, a decanter of wine is as much at home as a challah.

No wine is more welcome in Jewish homes in Canada than Mazel Tov, a wine made from Concord grapes grown on the sunny slopes of the Niagara Peninsula.

Mazel Tov is ruby red in colour, and richly sweet—but not cloying—to the taste. It's a wine you'll "remember", the kind of wine that you used to taste many years ago.

Mazel Too, made 'Kosher l'Pesach' under strict rabbinical supervision, is available throughout the year for every 'simcha'.

HAUSNER TELLS COURT IN JERUSALEM OF THE TORTURING AND MURDER OF JEWS

part in it." When Mr. Hausner insisted that Eichmann had used the laws to compel Jews to emigrate, the prisoner retorted: "I never forced any Jew to emigrate."

Eichmann showed his strongest flash of anger when Mr. Hausner taunted him for having slapped the face of a Viennese Jewish leader, Dr. Richard Loewenherz, in 1938.

Throwing his head back and directing a hateful glare at Mr. Hausner, he said with scorn: "I must say that if I first slap a person in the face and then apologize, that is a personal matter between two people." In interrogation by the Israeli police, Eichmann had admitted slapping Dr. Loewenherz but insisted that he immediately apologized in the presence of his subordinate officers.

The presiding judge, Moshe Landau, told Eichmann at the start of the session that if he still suffered from his morning attack of nervous tension and lack of sleep he could answer the Attorney General's questions without rising.

But Eichmann, still pallid but apparently refreshed from his nap, kept popping up like a marionette each time the court interpreter finished translating a question from Mr. Hausner. He rarely paused before answering. He spoke rapidly and often replied with heat.

Mr. Hausner was employing heavy sarcasm, addressing the prisoner in the glass-enclosed cage as "Herr Obersturmbannfuehrer" — Mr. Lieutenant Colonel — referring to Eichman's rank in the Nazi S. S. (Elite guard) forces.

Throughout his testimony Eichmann insisted that he had maintained "decent, correct" cooperation with Jewish leaders. Mr. Hausner got him to admit that when he compiled his memoirs in Argentine five years ago he said Jews must be "exterminated."

"But I did not mean physical extermination," Eichmann protested. At this the partly bald, bespectacled prosecutor flapped his black gown and threw an astonished look at the prisoner, says the New York Times. "Do you know of any extermination that is not physical?" he cried.

"Yes, certainly," said Eichmann. "In our struggle against France and England, we tried to overpower them, to reduce their strength. The term extermination was used often in this sense during the war. It did not mean physical extermination."

The Attorney General flapped his arms, looked owlishly at the gallery and said with sarcasm: "Ah, nicht physisch (not physical)."

Mr. Hausner tried to bring out that Eichmann ruled all Jewish affairs in Vienna and held Jewish leaders "in the palm of his hand." He cited a boastful letter Eichmann wrote to a friend in Berlin saying that Jewish leaders "dare not take a step without my permission — I keep them dancing to my tune."

"Is this decent, correct relations, Herr Obersturmbannfuehrer!" he asked in a high voice. But Eichmann was ready to answer that, too. "Yes," he said. "After all, one must remember that the jargon employed by soldiers is different from that of clergymen or doctors. It is at any rate open and honest."

Finally, in exasperation, Mr. Hausner observed that several witnesses, including a Protestant clergyman, Dean Heinrich Grueber, of Berlin, had testified to Eichmann's considerable power over Jewish life.

"Are all of them liars," he demanded, "and only you the one who speaks the truth?"

"No," replied Eichmann, "but the documents speak the truth and they confirm what I just said."

The counsel for Adolf Eichmann said that the Nazi Foreign Ministry took the initiative for the deportation and slaughter of 500,000 Hungarian Jews, says the New York Times.

The fate of the Hungarian Jewish community was sealed before Eichmann arrived in Budapest in early spring, 1944, Dr. Robert Servatius, the defense lawyer, argued as the defense case entered its final phase.

The West German defense counsel will attempt to show that all Eichmann did was to organize the "death trains" to Auschwitz, a traffic in doomed Jews that reached a daily average of 12,000 in mid-May, 1944. Eichmann, who headed the Jewish Affairs Department of the Gestapo, is accused of responsibility in the death of millions of Jews during World War II.

Dr. Servatius quoted dispatches seized from German diplomatic files to support his contention that the Foreign Ministry had pressed the deportations. He produced a memorandum from Eberhard von Thadden, Foreign Ministry expert on Jewish affairs, to the Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop, dated April 22, 1944, that said:

"The Reich Security Head Office reports that the 50,000 Jews intended for forced labor in closed camps will be deported. Details about transport are to be worked out by R. S. H. A. (Reich security headquarters). Lieut. Col. Eichmann, who is presently in Hungary, is receiving all necessary instructions from R. S. H. A. today."

Earlier, Edmund Veesenmayer, Nazi Ambassador in Budapest, informed the Foreign Ministry that Dome Sztojay, Hungarian Premier, had promised to put at least 50,000 Jews fit for labor at the disposal of the Reich, Dr. Servatius said.

Veesenmayer's dispatch reported that five-thousand additional Jews would be turned over in succeeding months and that the number of Jews assigned to forced labor inside Hungary would be increased from 100,000 to 150,000.

Dr. Servatius cited another document purporting to show that top officials of the Foreign Ministry were plotting the doom of Hungarian Jews as early as 1942.

A letter drafted by Dr. Martin Luther, a foreign ministry department head, says the New York Times, reported to the German legation in Budapest that the Hungarian minister in Berlin had protested about the application of anti-Jewish measures to Jews of Hungarian nationality residing in the Reich and German-occupied territories.

"I explained to the Hungarian envoy," Dr. Luther wrote, "that it is not pleasant for me to receive his démarche. We must, according to the fuehrer's orders, solve the Jewish problem in Europe. As the envoy probably knows, a number of countries like Slovakia and Croatia have agreed to the evacuation of Jews and even the French Government is considering the possibility of evacuating Jews from the occupied zone."

According to Dr. Servatius, Dr. Luther went on to say that any stumbling block put in the way of the German deportation program by Hungary would hinder German plans for clearing the occupied territory of Jews.

Dr. Luther told the Budapest legation: 'The Jewish problem in Hungary is more urgent still, I should like to request you to stress the arguments which move us to act in accordance with the Fuehrer's will and to crave the full and definite solution to the (Jewish) problem in Europe.

"Please induce the Hungarian Government to do its share within the framework of the measures required. Therefore, the objective actually consists of three phases:

"One — the exclusion of Jews from the realm of economic life. Two — to impose upon them the Yellow Badge. Three — to expedite the deportations of Hungarian Jews toward the East."

Before turning to Hungary, Dr. Servatius received from Eichmann denials of responsibility for the deportations of Jews from Greece, Bulgaria, Rumania, Italy and Slovakia. Eichmann was asked what was meant by the phrase "uninteresting consignment," applied by a German official to a group of Jews who had reported for deportation in Salonika, Greece.

Eichmann began a long reply explaining that thousands of able-bodied Jews had fled to the mountains near Salonika and that only 1,200 elderly and sick Jews had reported to Germany, says the New York Times. "You have not answered the question," Dr. Servatius warned his client. Eichmann's pallid face showed a slight flush of resentment, but he replied: "These 1200 were uninteresting because they were not agile, hence of no military importance."

Eichmann said that his former aide, Dieter Wisliceny, who was hanged in Czechoslovakia in 1947, had lied in testifying that Eichmann was deaf to appeals to halt deportations from Greece because of a typhus epidemic.

The Israeli prosecution fixed September, 1941, as the time when Adolf Eichmann became legally part of the conspiracy to exterminate European Jewry, according to the prosecution view of the law applying at the trial of Eichmann, says the New York Herald Tribune. At the same time, Attorney General Gideon Hausner advanced three chief legal reasons why Eichmann cannot be excused from full responsibility for the mass murders just because he acted under orders from his superiors, including Adolf Hitler, according to his story.

Actually, Mr. Hausner said, Eichmann was more zealous than Hitler himself in carrying out deportations and murders of Jews. He said Hitler had been prepared to allow 8,750 Jewish families to emigrate to Palestine if all the Jews in Budapest were handed over to the Nazis.

But Eichmann, Mr. Hausner said, maintained that there were "elements of biological value" among the Jewish families in question, and intervened with his immediate superiors to prevent them from being released.

A criminal conspiracy existed, based in the nerve center of the Nazi Gestapo and having ramifications upward to Heinrich Himmler and downward to the last man, however, little he was in rank and role.

However, the condition which applies in order to involve this "last man," whoever he may have been, is that he had full knowledge of what was taking place and that he remained within the criminal framework and nerve center after learning what the purpose was.

"And we heard this from Eichmann himself, that it was in September, 1941," Attorney General Gideon Hausner said, "when he stated: 'Heydrich (Reinhard Heydrich, head of the Sicherheitsdienst Security Service) informed me that Der Fuehrer had ordered physical extermination of the Jews.'

"From that moment onward, Eichmann was caught in the net of the criminal conspiracy, with Heydrich, with his subordinates and with all the others who were dealing in the thousands of little conspiracies which existed in every ghetto and in every community in every country, big and small, for the implementation of the over-all task."

On the subject of the illegality of the orders which Eichmann has pretended to have obeyed helplessly and abjectly, says the New York Herald Tribune, the Israeli attorney general argued that the torturing and murder of Jews not only were outrages against international law but that not even a Nazi German law existed to cover the worst of the crimes. Mr. Hausner put it this way: "On the other hand, we have factors which testify to the acts as crimes — the very essence of murder, the very essence of herding people like cattle, the very essence of tracking people like hunted beasts."

As to Eichmann's testimony that the Jews were considered by Nazi Germany to be enemies of the Reich, the Israeli prosecutor asked: "Can a man with his wits about him say that extermination of Jews, in all its various forms, could in any way advance the end of the war? Eichmann knew that there was no link whatsoever, no connection whatsoever, between the war and the extermination of the Jews. But this, of course, he has not admitted."
